Prof. Gary Dorrien to speak on “God’s Economy”
2012 Collins Lecture will explore faithful response to economic crisis

With high levels of unemployment and underemployment across the country, a growing divide between rich and poor, and economic uncertainty throughout the world, one question becomes increasingly important: “How do people and communities of faith respond to the economic crisis?”

Faith communities are coming together across Oregon to discuss how to respond to today’s profound political and economic challenges, while meeting the spiritual and material needs of their members and the broader community. The 2012 Collins Lecture “God's Economy: Faithful Response to the Economic Crisis” will provide an opportunity to pursue these issues.

Presented by Ecumenical Ministries of Oregon (EMO) on Nov. 1 at Trinity Episcopal Cathedral in Portland, the Collins Lecture will feature Professor Gary Dorrien, hailed by Princeton University philosopher Cornell West as “the pre-eminent social ethicist in North America today.”

A half-day workshop, “Economics 101: What you should know about the Economy,” will be held at the same location the afternoon preceding the lecture. The workshop will begin with a presentation by Martin Hart-Landsberg, professor of Economics and coordinator of Political Economy at Lewis & Clark College, followed by a panel discussion with Tom Kelly, president of Neil Kelly Co.; Gina Ronning, Portland State University graduate student and Occupy Movement activist; Aurolyn Stwyer-Pinkham, member of the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs; and Kay Toran, president/CEO of Volunteers of America Oregon.
