Ecumenical Ministries of Oregon receives Robert Wood Johnson grant to combat childhood obesity

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation has launched a 4.8 million dollar initiative to engage faith communities in combating the childhood obesity epidemic. Ecumenical Ministries of Oregon (EMO) is one of 21 faith-based coalitions across the country to receive a two-year grant.

Ecumenical Ministries of Oregon will focus efforts in Multnomah and Benton Counties, working with a network of citizens and religious institutions, and with Community Health Partnership and the Oregon Food Bank. The EMO coalition will conduct wellness surveys within congregations, develop a model wellness policy to guide religious communities in making healthy changes, and support partners in advocating for wellness on a broader scale in the community.

Project director, Jenny Holmes, is “thrilled that EMO will have a chance to impact this growing health crisis locally. Our current work on community food security—specifically, improving access to high quality local foods and supporting family farmers—links well with this new project.”

“EMO will place special emphasis on reaching children at greatest risk of obesity and its complications, primarily Hispanic/Latino and low-income populations,” says Corvallis project coordinator, Marcela Arredondo.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Department of Human Services, the number of overweight eleventh-graders in Oregon has increased by 63 percent since 2001. In 2007, 27 percent of eighth-graders were overweight, with more than 42 percent of those children living below the poverty line.

Latinos are disproportionately impacted by obesity and the burden of related chronic disease. In Oregon, Latinos have the highest incidence of obesity and overweight, at 30.9 percent and 38.6 percent respectively, and they are five times more likely to die prematurely, often of obesity-related disease.
