Justice Reinvestment Accountability and Equity Act

Justice Reinvestment creates safer and strong communities by prioritizing local community needs and reducing prison usage. It's Oregon's updated approach to public safety that right-sizes the state's return on investment for taxpayer dollars.

The program has successfully flatlined prison growth and maintained public safety.

The Accountability and Equity Act will update Justice Reinvestment to ensure maximum outcomes for the state's investment and that funds are being distributed equitably to the communities that need them most.

Justice Reinvestment Accountability and Equity Act

Building on the success of Justice Reinvestment, the Accountability and Equity Act will ensure that Oregon invests equitably in programs that more effectively reach communities of color and other communities that have been historically underserved.

Accountability: Returns on Oregon's Investment

Some Oregon counties are doing great at meeting Justice Reinvestment goals, but others need to improve, and a handful are consistently ineffective.

Counties that continually fall short will receive some provisional funding to improve. If perpetually ineffective, however, funds will be withheld.

Taxpayer dollars will be redirected to programs that address the needs of historically underserved communities including rural and tribal communities, communities of color, women, and LGBTQ people.

Equity: Reaching the Underserved

An Equity Advisory Committee to the Public Safety Task Force will make recommendations on how the program can more effectively and more equitably reach historically underserved communities in Oregon.

Majority comprised of people from historically underserved communities, the Committee will deliver recommendations to the Public Safety Task Force, the Governor, and Legislative Leadership.

The Accountability and Equity Act will also:

- Increase race, ethnicity, and gender reporting for counties to receive funds
- Require the Criminal Justice Commission to consider how each county is reducing racial and ethnic disparities when awarding grant funds, and
- Add two members from historically underserved communities to the Justice Reinvestment Grant Review Committee.
